

Mrs. Evanson had the other key, the cook had the other key to the house, because she comes up every day. So I went down town and I stopped in and told Miss Blodgett, Miss A. F. Blodgett who keeps a gift shop, notion store only 100- 150 - 200 feet from the station about the telegram that I had received. Then went over--

Q You had already told Mr. Eger about that?

A Oh yes; Mr. Eger was with me and I am almost positive I went around and told Mrs. Evanson. I certainly wouldn't have left without telling her because she came up to the house every day. So I bought a ticket for New Brunswick and they have the record of the sale of that ticket; it was the only ticket sold to New Brunswick that day; they have a record there of it in Lavalette at the agency there. I think I changed cars at Sea Girt and Monmouth Junction. All the way up in the train I kept wondering what had happened. At Monmouth Junction I saw a copy of the New Brunswick Home News, published that afternoon in which it told of the finding of the bodies and who they were. When I got out -- I had better go back -- I think I wired Edwin Carpender when I would arrive at New Brunswick.
